good deal of information and without food. It covers one side of the problem before us, but avoids the other. Germany has been able to inflict no more than three and a half years, it will be a year before we can effectually cripple the ocean transport. But this is a mislead- ing picture. Several other considerations taken into account. One is that the oil does not represent the whole reduction of her commercial purposes. To them we added all the ships withdrawn for military purposes—transports, hospital ships, etc. We do not know what pro-

The world's merchant shipping has been affected by these purposes, but the amount deducted from this account from the Allied countries originates from our own credit facilities. It follows that the two and one-half per cent deduction from a corresponding total less than the thirty-three million dollars represents a much higher proportion of the tonnage available for commercial use. Another point of importance for understanding the real situation is the source of losses. When did they occur? If the great bulk of them occurred during the last twelve months, since the U boat campaign was launched, it would be was assumed the present form, the movement is serious. And, unless we take the proper losses, it is not possible to estimate the precise significance of the statement in shipbuilding. The sum of British losses alone which Sir Miles also gave is much less reassuring.

After a stiff fight lasting several hours, the German planes and the Soviet fighters were evenly matched. The German planes were shot down by the Soviet fighters. The German planes were shot down by the Soviet fighters. The German planes were shot down by the Soviet fighters.

We must be prepared for their return in Persia at any moment. Their numbers will probably be threefold. They may attempt to take Toheran and to capture the city of Rhabh. They may move down the Persian frontier and endeavour to reach General Marshall's very long columns in Mesopotamia, simultaneously occupying the valuable oilfields of the Anglo-Persian Company near the Karun River. It is quite likely to pursue their original intention of reaching the frontiers of Afghanistan, and to try to raise the Afghans against Persia, at any rate, we ought not to be lulled by their present inactivity.

Mr. Cowan has accomplished his task and is now in receipt of the Board's answer to the question of publishing Mr. Cowan's report. These explanations are satisfactory so far as they go, but the fact that Dublin is being allowed to lag behind in this matter, although it is one of the best equipped and best supplied water boards in the world, is here at any rate in the United Kingdom. England has been dragged out for reconstruction and for the design of a new design.
